If so, it's time to give you the final polishing when making sure your personality arrives. If you have not done it, done. Keep social media accounts for your design business and differentiate them from your personal account. So unless you have everything about random anime and banner ads, less is more. As you saw with the examples above, some are created as a web page and some are multi-page portfolio sites. 3. Once you have done all the above, you are armed with a professional portfolio. In fact, sites like Instagram, LinkedIn, and Pinterest can easily act as mini portfolios that can carry their designs around the world and put them in front of potential customers you don't know. Edit your designs and select ruthlessly and select 15 to 20 of the best representations of what you do, including your higher profile designs, if you consider them worthy. You have a few seconds to get the spectator's attention and make them love you and only you. The same way it has been done for generations: through a portfolio of graphic design. Include some of the sketches, screenshots, or other work-in-progress iterations that led to the completed work. Black and white, color, bold, soft, full screen and thumbnails are all options as you consider your portfolio design for your personal website. If your style is anime and you want to know the anime, that ad by Costco Banner you designed isn't going to do you any favors. A multi-page website requires more time and thought. Now, the Grand Finale: Give your portfolio a final bug review. With the wallet template nailed, updating is easy. Think of it this way: you are designing your brand identity and telling creative people who you are. Kate Moross 2. Curate your best work Even if you're a beginner freelancer, you've probably come a long way to your design skills. Fortunately, it's easier than ever to create one. So, cured accordingly, and sprinkle into the types of personal ideas, passions and activities that will, they will.
